

100 Post Anniversary

It's a happy 100th post anniversary for Jo's Country Junction and it's a giveaway for you!

Since entering the blog world, I have been completely amazed at all the wonderful ideas a person can find in blogland. My hubby can't figure out how I would prefer the computer over the television...obviously he hasn't discovered blogs.

Anyway on to the giveaway. As many of you know, I blog here and have an early learning printable website at www.makinglearningfun.com. I thought I would give away something that might appeal to all of my viewers...a set of Rag Quilt Letters with bag.

To have a chance to win, leave a comment on this blog entry. To have another chance to win, blog about the giveaway on your blog. Then come back and leave another comment letting me know that you blogged about the giveaway.

For another chance to win, add Jo's Country Junction or Making Learning Fun to your blog roll. Then come back and leave a comment that you added the blog/site.

The give away closes on Friday night at midnight here. Good Luck!

If you aren't a winner, but want to make a set of letters for yourself. Here is a link to the Rag Letter tutorial at Oh So Happy Together. I made the bag using Rachel's Tutorial at P.S. I Quilt. I am warning you that I did adjust the directions for the bag by adding nine strips instead of eight. I also made the bottom piece 9.5 x 7. When the corners were sewn I used a 2" measurement rather than 1.5. The batting was cut the size of the top and the lining measurement changed to 16 x 10 1/4. The adjustments need to be made for the bag so that letters can fit in the bag.

Wouldn't they make a wonderful gift for the little one you love?
