

Almond Joy Cookies

In my Facebook feed I saw a recipe for cookies. They were listed as almond joy cookies. Well Almond Joy candy bars are my very favorite candy bar so I thought to give them a try. Well after reading the ingredients I could see that I wasn't going to make them. The ratio of ingredients seemed a little off like there might be a typo in the recipe. I decided to google and see if I could find a different recipe for them instead.

I did google and I did find a recipe.

The cookies only have four ingredients so they are super quick. They were a little bit hard to get off the pan. I quickly learned to let them sit about a minute before removing but not longer than that.

YUM. Hubby who doesn't really like coconut, has been eating them.

They are tasty and do remind me of an Almond Joy candy bar. I found the recipe at Mom on Time Out blog. You can follow this link for the recipe.

One of the best things I did to get me out of the rut I felt I was in with cooking was to make a commitment to have a recipe on the blog more frequently. I'm so glad I did as without that commitment, I likely wouldn't have tried these...YUM.
