

In My Mail...

I am so behind on my mail again. I'll explain more in another post why...for now let me just get you caught up.

I've had two deliveries come in...this is from Chris. She was estate sale shopping and bought some goodies to share with me! Wasn't that sweet?

I've said it before and will say it again and again, I love the cards most of all the things that are sent. It's a human connection. It's a reassurance that someone else connects and likes estate sales too. I love it...but I also love the fabric she sent. Check out the fun farm print. There's about a yard there. I'm going to have to think on where that can go. I'm thinking about making a pillow case for Hubby. He eats and work farm. He might as well sleep with it too! HA!!

There were some bits and pieces sent along too...fun.

More pieces these all seem to be about 3 1/2 inches so I'll size them up for sure and put them in the 3 1/2" scrap bucket.

What a fun little package. Chris also sent some money to help with charity quilting postage. I so appreciate that. I have another box that's going in Monday's mail.

My next package came from Andi in Wisconsin, our great neighbor state! Check out what she sent.... She sent goodies for Neighbor Girl....She had the idea to send a kit of Yellow Brick Road....and of course sent a few other goodies.

Here's the yellow brick road things...also a nice note on the package so I know what's what. PERFECT!!

The other goodies were great too. I ended up taking both of the books and put them by my bedside so I can read them at night before bed.

The other pattern was perfect too. I forgot all about the postcard patterns...so many of them are easy and would be perfect for a beginning quilter.

I'm so excited about all of this. Thanks many and much ladies. Your thoughtfulness is so appreciated.

It's so sweet to get goodies in the mail. I had a couple notes from people wanting to send partially completed projects and ended up giving them Ronda's contact information. Are there others who would like to finish projects of others' and pass the completed project on to charity? Let me know and if a note gets sent to me again about unfinished projects I can pass your info on to them. Here's the best place to reach me...rogjok@iowatelecom.net.
