

Kid Friendly Chocolate Peanut Butter Dip

The ho-hums have been bringing my snack offerings for the childcare kids to little variety. I looked in the cabinet and there was the plain Jane snack ever graham crackers. UGH.

I didn't feel like I could "do graham crackers" again. If I was sick of them the kids were bound to be sick of them too. So I went to the other cabinet...I opened it and saw chocolate pudding. Hmm. That might be okay but shucks....I only had one box. That's when the idea jumped in my head to somehow make the pudding into a chocolate dip and offer the graham crackers with it.

Then in the same cabinet that the pudding was, I saw the peanut butter. Hmm.

I ended up taking 2 cups of milk and mixed it with the pudding...I used the immersion blender but a whisk would likely work. Then I added a 1/2 cup of peanut butter. I blended it together and then let it set.

It looked like this...

I gave all of the kids a little bit in a cup and gave them graham crackers...

Here's Carver giving it a try.

The verdict was delicious.

It was a great success...everyone loved it, including Kramer and me and Kalissa.

After Carver got done eating he said. "Joey (yes he calls me Joey) me mustache.”

Bahahahahaha...no kiddo, that's just a dirty face. He wanted his picture taken with “his mustache”. Silly kid.

Anyway...if you have kiddos in the house, you'll likely be rewarded with smiles if you serve Chocolate Peanut Butter dip.