

Stash Report

With the topsy turvy life I've had, one would think I wouldn't have had a chance to get any fabric...NOT TRUE. Well that matters what you are classifying as fabric.

If the thrift stores are open and if the roads are okay, Hubby stops at the thrift store either to or from his doctor's appointment in Lacrosse. He always tells me it's the least he could do to stop being I've waited in the waiting room so long. He's still a sweetie even with all that is happening with his health.

I told you that I've been wanting to work on a pastel more "girly" baby quilt for Kelli in the same style as Kalissa's baby's quilt. Well that means I need pastel-ish colored shirts. If you're a quilter who quilts with recycled shirts, you know that finding pastel colored ones is a challenge. Well lucky for me, I do have quite a stash of them as I've been collecting for some time, but I also know I was going to use a lot of them up in this quilt so I thought to look some more and LOOK what I found... THREE pastel shirts all in one haul.

Typically I don't buy shirts when they are $2 each-too expensive for me. I typically wait for a bag sale but no sale time was coming up and they had just what I needed so I bought them.

I'm really getting to dig into these fabrics...

but first a few of the other blocks just in case Kelli has a boy...I need more pink...and more neutrals. More digging is going to happen and the shirts I did get are going to get de-boned.

I love stopping at the thrift store as we travel to and from the appointments... it breaks up the drive and it's a huge break from the happenings at the doctor's office.
