

Sunbonnet Sue Dish Towel with my Accuquilt Go!

If you are new to the blog, welcome. You have reached an archived free pattern. We typically put up new blog post twice daily so there is always something new and fresh here. Click HERE and see what's new today...

Before I get into today's post, I had a couple people asking for my Mock Ham Meatball recipe. Here a link...and now to today's business.

I was busy playing with my Accuquilt Go!, the Dresden Plate die, and the Sunbonnet Sue die. Here is how it turned out...If you keep reading, there's a giveaway too.

It's a little Sunbonnet Sue on a flour sack dish towel. She just sits right there on the corner and cute and country. Being I haven't really appliqued before, I think it turned out okay...If you want to see how to make one, you can check out this video.

Hopefully when I make the next one, my stitches will be a little more even and a bit less noticeable. It's all a learning curve...for me to have tackled this much applique is an amazing start. Anyone else have applique anxiety? I think I would actually like it if I ever found a method that I liked. I tried applique stabilizer (here is my review of that)...it was okay but I don't want to do machine applique. I want hand applique.
