

UFO Progress

Virginia Bound from Bonnie Hunter's book Scraps and Shirrtails I is on my front burner. I'm having trouble concentrating on anything else. I'm actually having to discipline myself to do other things...like the wedding quilt I got finished...and the charity quilts I want to finish. Oh my.

My blocks are in several stages. We took a car trip so I needed something to do as we traveled so ...pulling the backing paper off happened.

Here's my view...one nice stack of completed blocks and the open road.

Once home I sneaked up to the sewing room and finished a bunch...these need to get trimmed but I am making myself wait until nap time one day this week.

I scrambled and got the rest of the blocks this far along... the centers are done and the first neutral string piece is sewn down...again, I am making myself wait and will trim these over nap time too.

If you have questions on the process of how I am making these blocks, check out this post.

I think that's all the blocks I need for the quilt. I am so happy to say that as now I can clean up part of the mess in the sewing room. Working with strings is a messy business...but oh so worth it. I'm loving seeing this one come along. It's long over due that this one get finished.

I kind of have made a bit of a goal for this to be finished so I can take it to our retreat for show and tell. We'll see. I have other projects that need to get accomplished too...oh the life of a busy quilter!!

Catch me here next week. My goal...have the blocks all finished! YAHOO...I'd be so happy.

Find us linked up at Sew Fresh Quilts and Midweek Makers