

What I'm Working On...

I have about 10 projects going on right now but all those STOPPED when one of my favorite moms ever gave birth to a new baby boy, Brady. I used to do childcare for this family and if I was ever tempted to start childcare again, Brady's birth is about as close as I've ever gotten.

What special baby in my life can go without a quilt?...NONE! I stopped my other projects and started a baby quilt. I didn't really have anything in mind...Brady's dad is a volunteer fireman and their family is very active in the community. I had fireman fabric in my stash so it's a win-win. I get to de-stash and Brady gets a fireman quilt.

Here's how far I am. I made it using my Accuquilt Go! and my hexagon die. I'll do a tutorial and show you how I did it once the quilt is finished but for now...I need some help. Border...or no border.

Hubby thinks a narrow 2.5" border in red is the right choice. I was wondering about a "framing" border of background fabric then the narrow red border. I'd love suggestions..... I want to get this finished by Wednesday if possible because I want to go visit this little guy and bring the quilt.

If you want to see what others are working on, head on over to Patchwork Times.