

Whatever Wednesday

Let me say...I am LOVING the change from UFO Wednesdays to Whatever Wednesdays. It's allowed me to do some cross stitch. At times before I would go sew on a UFO just so I had something to blog about. Now I can do "Whatever" for "Wednesday". Oh it's been great. It's opened up lots of freedom for me and I'm loving it!

Last week I finished this...

It's a Lizzie Kate pattern that is part of this pack. I already stitched the larger piece.

With that done I moved on to this... This was especially meaningful to me last week.

As you can see that one got finished so I'm moving on... Time for the old project thread to be put away and new thread to come out. I use and LOVE Floss-A-Way Organizer bags. I have tried every way to organize thread and NEVER have I liked any of the methods. This I truly love. It's so easy. It doesn't spill and it's not super expensive. I will never even look for an alternate way of storing thread.

I put the first few stitches into my next project.

I am doing the companion project to this... The one on the right that says "Have Faith"....

I picked this one out last week too. I think I'll go and stitch the "Be the Rainbow in someone else's cloud" when this one is done...but I'm not sure. After I heard that Lizzie Kate was retiring, I put in an order and got a few (lots actually) things...

It's kind of funny as yesterday I got a picture from Kelli...

She picked up her cross stitch again too! She's working on a Lizzy Kate too...this one.

I want to do this too. There are SO MANY I want to do!!

Find me here tomorrow and be sure to check my Instagram today...grand baby pictures are sure to be found there as today is my grandma day!!!
